Redesigned $100 Bill Coming This Fall...

Don't worry--the new bills still have the portrait of Benjamin Franklin on them!

The changes are mostly new anti-counterfeiting features such as a blue three-dimensional security ribbon, alternating images of bells and the number 100 that moves and changes as the bill is tilted.

The new note also features the image of a bell inside a picture of an inkwell that changes from copper to green when tilted.

The blue security ribbon is woven into the note's fabric instead of being printed on. Another security strip, to the left of Franklin's head, is visible when the note is held up to the light. It is also embedded into the fabric. The new bill still has the watermark of Franklin's portrait that can be seen when held up to the light.

The older bills already in circulation will remain legal tender after the new notes are released, however, they will be destroyed and replaced as they pass through the Federal Reserve System.
